Railway History in Canada

The station took its name from the mansion belonging to the widow of pencil manufacturer Eberhard Faber, now the site of Faber Park and Pool. Passenger service is discontinued on the Canadian National line trains 7, 8, 35 and 36 from Ottawa to Napanee for the next 33 years and the traffic is handled by Canadian Pacific to Brockville with connection to and from Canadian National trains 6 and 15.

Railway History in Canada

In the frenzy of railway construction to service inland centres, the inadequacies of Sydney's temporary station became all too apparent. The had a grand parcels post office erected immediately to the west of Central Station. Preparations were in hand for resuming the work on Bouch's Forth Bridge, but as his culpability for the collapse of the Tay Bridge became well known, his Forth Bridge could not continue.
