Job 39:23

. Barnes' Notes on the Bible The quiver rattleth against him - The quiver was a case made for containing arrows. .

Job 39:23

Broughton renders it, and others; that is, he does not turn back from these, nor is he frightened at them when they are pointed to him or flung at him; so Aelianus speaks of the Persians training their horses and getting them used to noises, that in battle they might not be frightened at the clashing of arms, of swords and shields against each other; in like manner as our war horses are trained, not to start at the firing of a gun, or the explosion of a cannon.

Job 39:23

It was usually slung over the shoulder, so that it could be easily reached to draw out an arrow. The rattling of the quiver was caused by the fact that the arrows were thrown somewhat loosely into the case or the quiver, and that in the rapid motion of the warrior they were shaken against each other. .

And again: Turba ruunt stridentque sagittiferi coryti. .
