Divorce and the Air Force: Who stays married and who doesn't

What we want is to be able to get in there before couples start to identify themselves as distressed so we can help them to identify those themes and patterns that might be corrosive before they do any permanent damage. They were losing a lot of people to tooth decay, root canals and that sort of thing so they were experimenting with this regular checkup model. Alternative support groups helped Ingrid Herrera-Yee, a mental health coordinator and blogger for the Military Spouse Advocacy Network, a website and network of volunteers who empower military spouses and provide them with a stronger support system at their military installations.

Why are more women divorced? But Herrera-Yee, like Pape, interacts more with her patients or spouses seeking help online. Cohabiting couples are together more often, sometimes with children or other relatives, and sometimes by themselves. Personnel officers come in second, and intelligence officers third.

We are looking for couples where one or both are active duty to take the marriage checkup and then give us feedback on what they think. He and his wife, Air Force Maj. Informed consent was obtained from all individual participants included in the study.

Four ways to strengthen couples' relationships now

James Cordova is a Professor of Psychology, the Director of the Marriage Checkup Program, and Chair of the Psychology Department at Clark University in Worcester, Massachusetts. The move from strictly dental treatment to prevention happened in the Army during the 1950s partly to keep soldiers ready and able to go into the field.

Cordova Clark University Professor , chair of the Department, may not be a household name — yet — but his research and comments featured recently in The Wall Street Journal nearly have gone viral. Regardless of how well a couple gets along or their situation at home, a pandemic is a stressful experience that can undermine the best of relationships, says Thomas Bradbury, PhD, a clinical psychologist at the University of California, Los Angeles.
