The Long Recessional: The Imperial Life of Rudyard Kipling by David Gilmour at Abbey's Bookshop

There his model had been the vignette or extended anecdote.

In style, these stories showed the influence of the writers Edgar Allan Poe 1809—1849 , Bret Harte 1836—1902 , and Guy de Maupassant 1850—1893. Such indulgence naturally made the baba log rather spoilt and, as one of Lockwood's acquaintances put it, 'badly in need of a basting'. The officer sat on the chair, The men lay on the grass, And all the time we halted there I prayed my cup might pass.

The writing is accessible yet bland, so this book could have been so much more. One of Alice's sisters offered to have Trix, another suggested sharing Rudyard with her brother, but nobody volunteered to have both together or to keep the 'self-willed rebel' all the time. Kipling's daughter and heiress objected to this version, which had altered Kipling's Burma girl into a Burma broad, the man, who east of Suez can raise a thirst, into a cat and the following temple-bells into crazy bells.

The countryside renews itself generation after generation. But there was an excuse for his bitterness, as there was with Jeremiah—he KNEW what was going to happen. For more information see Gilmour, David.

Baltimore Sun

I learned a ton about British imperialism in this book. You just need to be sure to include Rudyard's middle and soon to be only child.

They reflect Kipling's darkened worldview following the death of his daughter, Josephine, in 1899, and the death of his son, John, in 1915. Selth notes that contemporary readers soon noticed Kipling's inaccurate geography, such as that Moulmein is 61 kilometres 38 miles from the sea, which is far out of sight, and that the sea is to the west of the town, not east.
