Systems of Survival: A Dialogue on the Moral Foundations of Commerce and Politics by J. Jacobs

To the contrary, the purpose of her book is to help instill in politics and commerce more moral considerations. After reading Jacobs' book, I have come to understand just how tricky some of these problems can be, and just how easy it is for good people to fall into error at the junction between commercial life and guardian life. Because we possess these two radically different ways of dealing with our needs, we also have two radically different systems of morals and values—both systems valid and necessary.

Morality/Immorality of Worlds of Business & Politics

The gives a perfectly adequate encapsulation of the guardian and commerce syndromes Still fun to think about. Similarly, she claims that the guardian moral syndrome is applicable to government, charities, hunter-gatherers, and religious institutions.

Systems of Survival: A Dialogue on the Moral Foundations of Commerce and Politics by J. Jacobs

The book begins with Jacobs introducing Armbruster, the host, and his four guests, each with vastly different backgrounds, as they, through alternating and varying perspectives, discuss moral honesty.

Jacobs makes a surprising claim—one that has been misunderstood by some reviewers. ACA implementation spent billions of dollars on politically-connected contractors for failed systems and hiring of connected patronage employees. Each character represent a different point of view and together they develop, through a series of socratic dialogues and research, a moral system that answers the initial quest of a systemic thinking about morality in practical working life.

It is not mine to judge my own actions, but when I think about coworkers they do NOT tend to meet the book's stereotypes. The question finds root in Plato's ideal republic and his division of responsibility. Fictional character Ben shares his experience with the real Canadian protest group PPOWW, Preserve and Protect Our Wilderness Watershed, where he faced a moral dilemma and lied to the television people about the degree of harm to the forest in order to receive the media exposure needed to increase awareness of the site p.
