Jasper Johns A Retrospective ARTBOOK

He returned to New York in 1953, where he met Robert Rauschenberg, John Cage, and Merce Cunningham, with whom he would famously collaborate. From the 1960s, Johns was interested in language and its relationship to visual perception and began to incorporate words and letters into his paintings, doubling as their titles.

Jasper Johns Retrospective by Bernstein Roberta

An introductory essay by Kirk Varnedoe, the exhibition's curator, looks back through the layers of memory in Johns's recent work to review the essential themes that have engaged the artist since his epoch-making Flag and Target paintings of the mid-1950s. These years reveal considerable growth for Johns as a printmaker, and he experimented with extending printmaking techniques into painting.

Jasper Johns : a retrospective

The plates are arranged to follow the stages of his career, allowing comparison of paintings, drawings, sculptures, and prints from each period, as his style developed and changed.
