Realism (arts)

With this painting, Courbet cemented himself within the Realism movement that was developing at the time through his depiction of an ordinary rural funeral service in his birth town. Realist artists dismissed this within their artwork, as they believed that everyday life and the modern world existed as appropriate subjects for art. Ordinary yet contemporary situations were shown in a truthful and accurate light, with artists including the unpleasant aspects of life to display an honest depiction of what they saw.

Realism Movement Overview

Since all states want to survive, and anarchy presupposes a self-help system in which each state has to take care of itself, there is no division of labor or functional differentiation among them. Renaissance theorists opened a debate, which was to last several centuries, as to the correct balance between drawing art from the observation of nature and from idealized forms, typically those found in classical models, or the work of other artists generally.

Realism (international relations)

In contrast, neorealists assume that the fundamental interest of each state is security and would therefore concentrate on the distribution of power.

Realism (international relations)

The concept of a double ethics, private and public, that created a further damage to traditional, customary ethics was invented. Wise Choices, Apt Feelings Oxford: Clarendon Press. For a further discussion of quietism by Wright, see Wright 2007.

Realism Movement Overview

So we are forced to expand that ordinary conception to include forms of moral perception and intuition.
