City centre masterplanning and cultural spaces: A case study of Sheffield

We discuss this comparative process and how a reflexive reading of notions of and strategies associated with credibility, transferability, dependability and confirmability enabled new ways of working and thinking with existing data.

Staff

Contributions are drawn from many disciplines but the main focus is geographical. We argue that the often tacit institutional construction of scientific citizenship is a critical, and relatively undeveloped, element of analysis-one that offers considerable insight into the practice and democratic implications of engaging publics in science and science policy.

Analysing Leisure Policy

Using information on the municipal resources and the municipal provision of public goods, and applying a fully non-parametric approach to estimate local government overall efficiency, the analysis shows that more direct democratic activity is associated with higher government efficiency. In this article, we explore the institutional negotiation of public engagement in matters of science and technology. This paper presents a case study of Sheffield's city centre masterplan, focusing on the Heart of the City, civic core.

Exeter City Council

Finally, Hamilton and Wyver discuss the importance to parents of the New South Wales Child Personal Health Record and how this can be better improved to provide more support to the parents when the perceived need is greatest.

Exeter City Council

A tool to evaluate the positive and negative consequences of caring for dying patients is warranted.

The voices of residents are heard only when it is convenient.

Analysing Leisure Policy

Ancillary information such as Tuition Fees for your programme of study and aspects of life as a University Level Student at the college are provided on the relevant pages of this website. The data were analyzed using a thematic approach and the findings identified that Occupational Therapists were delivering their support mostly in targeted and specialist tiers, but also that some universal activities were involved.

Direct democracy and local government efficiency

Replication of the study is recommended across additional Australian and international universities to determine differences in training content and experiences which may impact on attitudes towards training and perceived competence. In the concluding section of the paper, we reflect on the societal implications of the emerging discourse of new nuclear build as a means of delivering climate change mitigation and set an agenda for future research regarding the re framing of the nuclear energy debate in the UK and beyond. Drawing on statistical modelling and qualitative analysis conducted on the four different tourism sub-sectors, a final integrated model is produced.
