Nongovernmental organizations and the cultural development perspective in Thailand: A comment on Rigg (1991)

Instead, the results have been the displacement of tens of thousands of villagers, the loss of traditional fishing and agricultural livelihoods, the depletion of wetlands culture, the ecological destruction of the rivers and dependent habitats, and the salinization of water sources that consequently make intended irrigation impossible. Thaksin had attempted to reduce the power of the old elites, replacing many civil servants and Army generals with his loyalists.
