Articles of Faith

Ramananda Chatterjee was arguably the most influential Indian editor in the last few decades of colonial rule. Few researchers of Indian economic thought can ignore the raging controversies in its pages over the years. The EPW has been criticized—quite rightly, in my opinion—for being dominated by Marxists, rather than remaining true to the eclectic hopes of its founder.

Articles of Faith

Chatterjee was more than an intellectual impresario with a roster of brilliant writers. There were clearly some obsessions—especially political freedom, economic challenges, Indian art and our national history.
