Follow the Paths of Viking Raiders from Norway to North America

All of these illustrated patch knives, dating from the early nineteenth century, were found in the Valley of Virginia, but other similar ones were made and used all over the frontier areas of Virginia and North Carolina.

North American Indian Artifacts, First Edition

The felling axe in Figure 35, found in the Valley of Virginia, does have a steel bit and is of higher quality; however, it still has a bogus touch mark.

How to Identify an Indian Tool Made From Rock

We have some older pieces and some more current decorative pieces. Many collectors tend to collect pieces that are similar to one another in provenance, shape or general quality.

Stash of Paleoindian Artifacts Found at 12,000

The group was notorious for sailing their longboats into harbors and viciously attacking the people there—stealing all the available loot, taking slaves and killing just about everyone else.

Blades in VA and NC

Date found: Purchased from independent dealer in Galesburg IL, Mar. In the same timeframe, Virginia decided to consolidate its state-owned arms industry in Richmond. Both sides of the population, though, were inspired by the same sentiment: to go out and find new land.
