All I would say now is that some intriguing concepts get drowned in a sea of gratuitous blood, leaving only a slight impression on the mind. Hopefully they're as good as the first one! So now we have these four school Rock 'n Roll vampires? Imagine, that was almost a thousand years ago. Where is his grotesque, macabre, horror-humor mix? And there are some scenes in here that are genuinely very good, with lush description that makes gore almost beautiful, an amoral empathy for even the worst human beings or vampires , and an overwrought but earnest romanticism that reminds me of Poppy Z.

Two stars for interesting ideas, but the pacing and writing didn't really grab me. All the weird psychology was boring too. Can I just copy paste that to hit my sentence total? Then abruptly an awful narration cuts through the spell, reminding me to not get too distracted, this is still the One Shot era, with all of its pitfalls.

Deviant Lust: Vampire Junction

I enjoyed it much more than I expected. The best scenes have an incredible energy, I really like the way it developed the archetypes concept, it's frequently funny.

So now we have these four schools of vampire philosophy. I am sure that they are cast and crew members and it says a lot about this movie that so few of them actually bothered voting for it.

I am currently working on a new and improved version, and will have it up within the next few months. Eh, it could have been a fun romp if it didn't drag so much.

Vampire Junction (2001)

An elderly Lina Romay checks into an Old West town with vampires. . Vampire Junction is an exception.
