Although the research was limited to Southern California, it could have big implications if similar patterns are found elsewhere. Within the next couple of miles the road narrows to one lane and potholes become more prevalent.

Ride The Big Red Cars;How Trolleys Helped Build Southern California by Spencer Crump

Spreckels told Huntington to knock off his expansion as it would not only put Spreckels in direct competition with the PE, but it would also be a rampant monopoly along the Southern Californian coast. In 1911, Pacific Electric Railway Company rolled out service to the Valley, enhancing commercial opportunities and residential development in the area. Census Bureau: State and County QuickFacts.
