In 1912, Ansky organized the Jewish Ethnographic Expedition, which set out to conduct a survey of Jewish life on a national scale. Seventeen years old, this was the first independent act in my life, but I abounded in dashing self-reliance and was greatly inspired by the high ideals which lit up my vision.

In the tower there were four gates, facing each of the four sides of the world. The book also contains little-known works of autobiographical and fantastical prose fiction, as well as an excerpt from The Destruction of Galacia, Ansky's four-volume chronicle of the Eastern Front in the First World War. In his eBay description, Mannis claimed to have acquired the box thought to be a wine cabinet at a 2001 estate sale.

Two wooden posts support the roof; an old brass lamp hangs from the center of the ceiling above the pulpit, which is covered with a dark cloth. Private citizens generally have great difficulty in gaining access to military camps in countries at war because of the many guard posts set up to examine documents.
