Loss of the handkerchief

I bathed in the radiated neatness Of thousands of titles But the sight that moved me most Was a pair of moccasins Out there on the carpet like a couple of canoes Set to take someone bigger than the Yeti Into the mist that cloaks the waterfall Of unremitting, ever-extending time, Which, captured in its density and essence Will outrun even death.

Loss of the handkerchief

When things go darker still among the darkness I dream that it is I, in his canoe, Who is swallowed by a canvas shark And when he serves at tennis It reminds me that sometimes the mad pose Is all that there is left And needs your full assurance, To underpin the chaos This poem had its impulse In the way Hulot looks frantic When the fireworks erupt The delicious grace of his confusion As he runs twelve ways at once. I asked the waiter If he could see what I saw. Filmed from high up H-bombs being tested were the jellyfish That used to gather in Sans Souci baths In a clear attempt to stop me jumping From the ten-foot tower.

The Loss of the Handkerchief. an Heroic

On foot below The shedding jacarandas, gulls patrolled Like condescending white supremacists Sharing with pigeons the enhanced green lawn, The purple passage that announces spring In Sydney, our October tapestry Flown in for two weeks from a Loire chateau. And why is he appearing only now, long later?.
