Cider making display

A cider competition for all agesThis year, the competition for the annual Cardiff Ciders competition was run in a pub in Cardiff called The Cider House, which was one of a number in the city to host cider competitions. The bottom line was 'No cider, no work'.

Cider

This cider competition took place at the University of East Anglia and was run through the College of Agricultural Sciences at UEA. During the course of research into Welsh craft cider I have spoken with many cider-makers at all scales of the craft cider industry in Wales. The cider competition was organised by The College of Culinary Arts at UEC and featured cidersmakers from across England and Wales.

Cider

Very few craft cider makers can regard cider-making as their only job, and the story of Welsh craft cider-making is also a story about co-opting and rewarding the informal labour of a wider kin network. There may be delays in receiving your shipment due to disruption caused by the coronavirus.

Cider

The winner of this competition was Simon Williams, who had the pleasure of tasting a selection of cider from his cider cellar. The smallest producer I spoke to, the Hayes family from Lampeter regard their cider making as a full-on family project, as children and grand-children are enlisted to wash bottles and bring fruit to the mill.
