

Biofeedback - principles and practice for clinicians

Williams & Wilkins - Biofeedback (1989 edition)

Description: -

- Biofeedback (Psychology)
- Therapeutics.
- Biofeedback training.
- Biofeedback - principles and practice for clinicians
- Biofeedback - principles and practice for clinicians
- Notes: Includes bibliographies and index.
- This edition was published in 1989

Filesize: 17.58 MB

Tags: #Biofeedback, #Mind

Biofeedback (1989 edition)

Providers are ethically required to take special care to insure that the following groups understand the proposed intervention to the best of their abilities and can decline if they truly wish to: 1 Children must be informed within the limits of their ability to understand.

Biofeedback (1989 edition)

Feedback technique for deep relaxation. Clinical biofeedback: A procedural manual. Failure to do so is a breach of ethical practice.

Biofeedback (1989 edition)

Even the healthy individual shows little precise awareness of, or control over, individual motor units in the muscles. Clinicians may need to monitor medication side effects. Reports of biofeedback applications to a variety of medical and emotional disorders proliferated rapidly in the 1960's and 1970's.

Biofeedback (1989 edition)

Home devices targeting the general population must have detailed instructions as to the correct use of the unit. Barbara Brown did most of the logistical work for the conference, set up the scientific program and later was elected as the first President.

Biofeedback, Mind

The recording technology is standardized and is accepted within professional communities involved with making psychophysiological recordings.

Standards for Performing Biofeedback

This applies even if the therapist and the client are the same gender. Journal of Abnormal Psychology , 82 2 , 299-308. In a recent publication Schwartz and Associates categorized biofeedback applications according to the quality of outcome research supporting each application.

Biofeedback (1989 edition)

Further, incontinence is one of the most frequent reasons many older adults are placed prematurely in nursing home care, and effective treatment preserves the personal dignity of independent living. Journal of Transpersonal Psychology, 2, 1-26. Therapists cannot legally or ethically charge for a treatment for which there is no factual basis to conclude the treatment will succeed Belmont Report, 1988.

Related Books

- Charles Landelle \(1821-1908\) - exposition re trospective : 25 Juin - 13 Septembre, 1987
- Models in biology - mathematics, statistics and computing : computing examples supplement
- Introduction to the law of contract
- Crisi della ragione - \[scritti
- Cause of my life