twoTwentyEight: DEEDS OF TITLE IN THE ANCIENT WORLD

This one also is preserved in Jerusalem by the Israel Department of Antiquities. The manor of Manorbier and Penally consisted of two parishes of the same names. The document is predominantly in secretary hand but titles, place names and proper names are generally in a different script, such as italic, to make them stand out.

twoTwentyEight: DEEDS OF TITLE IN THE ANCIENT WORLD

This document, dated August 1618, forms part of the manorial survey for Manor of Beere and Penally in Pembrokeshire. It is of special interest to note that the title deed is described as being sealed, but that alongside it there also was an unsealed document.

twoTwentyEight: DEEDS OF TITLE IN THE ANCIENT WORLD

The idea that judgments would be poured out upon the world before the end is strongly rooted in the Hebrew prophets.

twoTwentyEight: DEEDS OF TITLE IN THE ANCIENT WORLD

Those who adopt a preterist or historicist model for interpreting the book will doubtless find other explanations for the opening of the seven seals. The redemptive ability of Jesus Christ to open the scroll, as in ancient times, rested on his qualifications.

twoTwentyEight: DEEDS OF TITLE IN THE ANCIENT WORLD

In the Bible, we encounter such a title deed in the career of Jeremiah, when God instructed the prophet to purchase a piece of property from his cousin Hanamel ben Shallum Jer.
