Spanish Borderlands Sourcebooks

The idea of the borderland has been used to discuss a variety of dynamics beyond what Anzaldúa specifically referred to in her book. A French landing led by Robert Cavelier de La Salle, on the Texas coast in 1684 spurred the Spanish to build missions in that area. This can easily be achieved with.

. The Franciscan mission of Nuestra Señora del Espíritu Santo de Zárate-Laguna, built at Matagorda Bay in 1722 to help protect the coast from the French, was later moved inland. Frontier, typically but not exclusively, refers to a historical boundary between expanding European settlements and indigenous settlements.
