But where funds are available, boards, at their own discretion, may choose to continue to offer NTIP supports to their second-year teachers. An open question asking principals to describe the effect of the teacher shortage on their school.

Schools are relying on inexperienced staff and supply teachers, survey reveals

We strongly disagree on the first point: Data from states and districts, from surveys and credentialing offices, makes it clear that there are currently not enough qualified teachers offering their services in the fields and locations where they are needed in all parts of the country. The recurring finding — that there is a surplus of teachers on the eve of the new school year — raises the question of whether these are the qualified teachers that principals are looking for. Another attempt at analysis implemented in this study was to collect data from job advertisements in order to gain some quantitative information regarding the magnitude of the teacher shortage.

Research Repository Theme: Teacher Demand and Supply

This short report provides provincial and national values relating to one of the Action Plan indicators, namely indicator 14, which reads as follows: The number of qualified teachers, aged 30 and below, entering the public service as teachers for the first time during the past year. This aids coherence and cohesion in student learning. Factors Effecting Teacher Shortage Identifying the factors that affect a teacher shortage depends on adopting one of two viewpoints: one that perceives this problem as stemming from factors operating on the macro system level, i.
