Warownia Markovi Kuli : izvestai od rabotite na misijata 1984

According to some historical findings, until the second part of the 14th century and even later, this fortress was defended by only 40 soldiers. It does not matter how much pieces you have, the main thing is how they are placement! In general this is a remix of chess, checkers and corners. The rampart on this terrain dates from the 13th and 14th centuries and is in good condition.

During the four-decade archaeological research, remnants indicating the existence of an early antique settlement - Keramija, were found. On the south wall there are three well-preserved towers. After the death of King Marko in 1395, this settlement was taken by Ottoman forces.

At this time the inhabitants of the former settlement migrated to a new settlement at the foot of Markos towers. The towers, named after Serbian medieval Prince Marko Mrnjavcevic, are located on a 120–180 m high hill, surrounded by steep slopes covered with minute granite stones. On its north side, there is a double gate, as well as a large guardhouse between the entrances.

The lowest zone of the rampart consists of a row of short walls drawn in a broken line. In the Roman period, this small village expanded into the southwest, a fact suggested by the several marble ornaments of an early Christian basilica. The walls are about one meter thick and were built of limestone mortar and rest upon the large limestone rocks.

This new settlement from the 14th century was given the name Varos which is still in use today. DOSTĘPNOŚĆ: Dostępna tylko na miejscu.
